Campus recruits panic after IT firms delay induction

RASHMI BELUR @ Bengaluru

THE crisis in the IT job market has affected not just those who are working in tech companies but also students who were recruited through engineering campus placements and were looking forward to join the firms.

Some companies that took part in campus placements and recruited students are now postponing joining dates. Some others have outrightly refused to hire them.

According to engineering colleges from across Bengaluru and candidates who have got job offers from IT companies, small and also wellestablished companies are expressing their helplessness at giving specific joining dates to students.

Jittery students have started ap proaching placement officers at the colleges concerned.

There is no clarity on how many students have been affected as some prefer not to approach the colleges. said some placement officers. But the trend is worrying, they say.

Prof Ravishankar, placement officer at Bengaluru's BMS College of Engineering, told Express: "Now the responsibility is on us, we need to strike a balance. We are even trying to get students placed in other companies as those who recruited during campus placements are re-

Students should be ready to take up challenges. When the companies are not doing business, who can accommodate students? We need to understand the situation and accept the fact

MC Dinesh, former FKCCI president fusing to take them in."

Colleges are advising students to take up jobs with smaller companies for now and wait till stability returns to the industry before approaching the bigger companies.

"I was supposed to join a company in August first week, But I got an e-mail from the company saying they were deferring the joining date. They did not even specify the next date," said a student from PES Institute of Technology (Hosur Road campus) in Bengaluru.

DIFFICULT TO COPE FOR STUDENTS: PS

Students who took loans are finding it difficult to cope

RASHMI BELUR @ Bengaluru

PLACEMENT officers say earlier companies would at least induct candidates and place them on a bench. Now that is not possible as bench sizes in the companies themselves are increasing. As a result, some engineering colleges are allowing students who have not received joining dates to participate in off-campus placements that are currently on.

Prof KS Sridhar, placement officer and principal of PES University, said, "This is due to certain market conditions and we are allowing even 2017 batch students to participate in the ongoing off-campus placement drives. Those who have not received joining dates yet will also be sent to other companies ready to do recruitment drives on their premises."

Dr Savitha Rani, placement officer at MS Ramaiah Institute of Technology Bengaluru, said, "Students are approaching us with e-mails sent from companies who have deferred joining said Dr Ravishankar of BMSCE.

dates. We are requesting the companies not to shatter the hopes of students dreaming about their first jobs. We are asking them to take students in and put them in any other team where there is a requirement."

Meanwhile, students who availed education loans and need to repay them having completed their course, are finding it difficult to cope with this uncertainty. "I studied engineering by taking education loan which is for a period of four years without interest. Now that my course is over, I need to start paying back in instalments. The company that made the offer is now refusing to take me in," said a student of MSRIT.

Students get counselling

Colleges are now offering counselling sessions for students. "Some students may get depressed and resort to
