SMARTPHONE APP TO HELP ALERT DROWSY DRIVERS

New application, made at Hong Kong Baptist University (HKBU), to avoid fatal accidents caused by fatigue driving

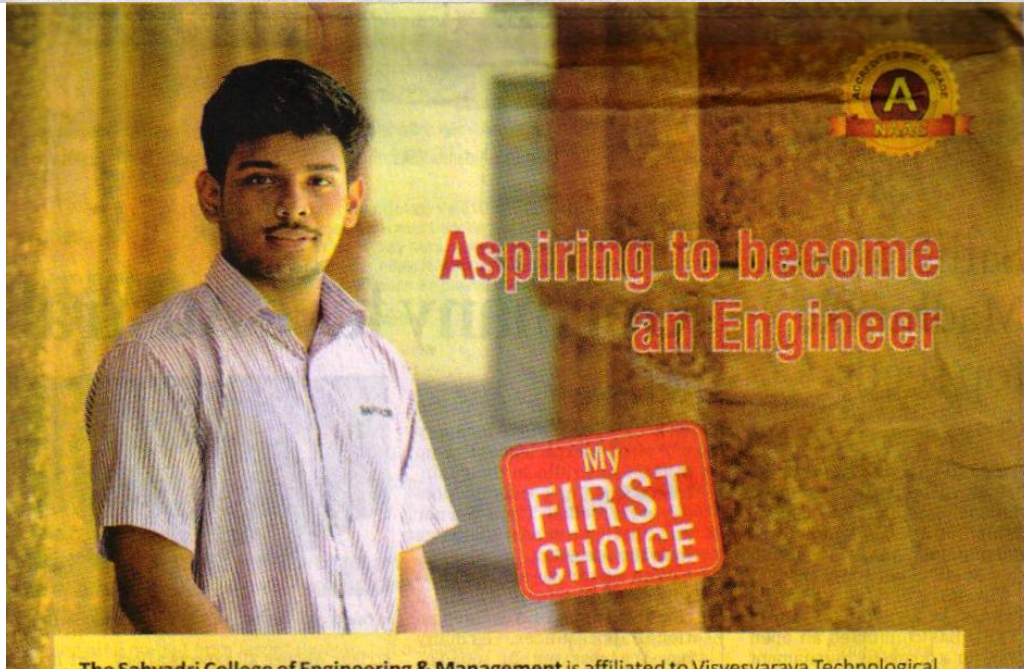

APP MAKES USE OF PHONE'S CAMERA

Adopts smartphone's real-time video to track and analyse facial features of a driver, in particular the changes in his eyelids and head position, which are prominent fatigue symptoms. After installing app, driver just has to put it near the steering wheel, with the front camera facing him

ALARM TURNED OFF BY VOICE OR HAND

- When the camera captures features like drooping eyelids, drowsiness or nodding off, an alarm is automatically set off
- To ensure that the driver is awakened, the driver has to turn off the alarm either by voice or by hand
- No additional devices or sensors required
