CASE STUDY – [Compulsory]

Earlier in 1957, in order to popularize Khadi among the masses, the government set up the Khadi and village Industries Commission (KVIC) with the broad objective of providing employment at the village level, the economic objectives of producing saleable articles and the wider objectives of creating self – reliance amongst the poor and developing a strong rural community spirit, KVIC promoted Khadi and associated articles through exclusive outlets called Khadi bhandars. Ever since, then, government has continued to support to Khadi. However, over the years, problems have steadily mounted. According to designers production of Khadi was inconsistent and the cloth was prone to shrinkage and fabric stretch. Fabric colours were also limited. Red tapism and bureaucracy were prevalent throughout KVIC. Corruption was rampant, as there were many middlemen. In addition, there were many bogus Khadi units operating in the country, which made verification of rebates to be paid an extremely time consuming process.

The production of Khadi is a labour intensive process. To support khadi, KVIC also encouraged village production of toilet soaps and detergents, honey, handmade paper etc., But still public interest was declining.

In order to revive Khadi, several initiatives were taken by government as well private individuals, KVIC organized fashion shows. In 1990, Ritukumar presented her first Khadi collection, Rohit Bal also promoted fashion in Khadi. On the organization front, the government took steps to restructure the Khadi industry. The global consulting firms, Arthur Anderson, were called to make recommendations. They suggested that KVIC be converted into a policy making body and that an independent marketing body to be formed to handle sales, distribution and promotion. KVIC also registered Khadi as a brand name.

Technological innovations, such as blending of Khadi with tencel in a 70:30 ratio, were introduced. An Austrian company also proposed to modify and blend the fabric to about 50% more moisture.

The government has also allocated a large advertising and promotional budget to KVIC. It proposed to set up Khadi shops in all international airports. However, Khadi like any other craft of India would need to face the challenges of quality and producing contemporary designs, that would appeal to the taste of present generation.

Questions :

- a. Analyze the environmental factors affecting the Khadi Industry. (07 Marks)
- b. What strategies would you recommend for the revival of Khadi? Justify your recommendations by giving three reasons why do you think it will succeed. (07 Marks)
- c. What are the implementation factors that you feel are critical to the success of Khadi in future? (06 Marks)
