- 8 Case Study (Compulsory) :

After having spend 3 years as a production scheduling supervisor at a Toyota Kirloskar Motor Pvt Ltd. manufacturing plant, she recently took a position as manager of telephone services at Info Centre Technologies Pvt Ltd. In her new job, Preeti supervises 20 telephone service employees. These people have direct contact with customers – providing quotes, answering questions, following up on claims and the like.

At Toyota Kirloskar, Preeti's employees knew they had only one constituency to please. That was management, but Preeti is finding that her employees at Info Centre have it more difficult. As service employees, they have to save two masters management and the customer. And atleast from comments her employees have made, they seem to think there's a discrepancy between what they believe customers want them to do and what they believe management wants them to do. A frequent complaint, for instance is that customers want the telephone representatives undivided attention and to spend as much time as necessary to solve their problem. But the representatives see management as wanting them to handle as many calls as possible per day and to keep call as short as possible.

This morning a representative came into Preeti's office complaining of severe headaches. "The more I try to please our customers, the more stress I feel" the representative told Preeti. "I want to do the best job I can for our customers but I don't feel like I can devote the time that's necessary. You constantly remind us that it's the customers that provide our paychecks and how important it is to give reliable, courteous and responsive service but then we feel the pressure to handle more calls per day per hour."

Preeti is well aware of studies that have shown that role conflict is related to reduce job satisfaction, increased turnover and absenteeism, and fewer organizational behaviour. Several role conflict is also likely to lead to poor customer service.

After talking to herself, Preeti concluded that regardless of whether their perceptions were accurate, her people certainly believed them to be. They were reading one set of expectations through their interactions with customers and another set through what the company conveyed during the selection process, in training sessions and through the behaviour that management rewarded.

Questions :

- a. What's the source of Role conflict here? (05 Marks)
- b. Are there functional benefits to management from role conflict explain? (05 Marks)
- c. Is conflict among these telephone employees is greater as compared to typical employees? Explain. (05 Marks)
- d. What can Preeti do to manage this role conflict? (05 Marks)
